Life of Patrick Henry, I, 28-48; Campbell's History of Virginia, 507-518; Cobb's Rise of Religious Liberty in America, 108-111; Meade's Old Churches and Families of Virginia, I, 216-225, and (especially for documents showing the clergy's side of the case) Perry's Papers Relating to the History of the Church in Virginia, 434-448, 458-501, 506-519.

Rev. John Camm was son of Thomas Camm, of Hornsea, Yorkshire, England. Born in 1718, he took his B. A. degree at Trinity College, Cambridge, in 1741-42, and came to Virginia in or before 1745, when he was minister of Newport Parish, Isle of Wight county. In 1749 he was appointed professor of divinity in William and Mary College, and was its President from 1771 to 1777, when he was removed by the Board of Visitors on account of his sympathy with England. He died in 1779, and has many descendants.

For account of John Camm and his family see William and Mary Quarterly, IV, 61-62, 275-278.

The Effect of the Adoption of the Constitution upon the Finances of Virginia.*

By W. F. DODD, University of Chicago.

In the first years of the colony of Virginia all revenue was raised by tithes, which though comparatively just at that time became more and more unequal with the growing complexity of society. The imposition of other taxes was a result of struggle between the rich landlords and the poorer classes.

Customs and tonnage taxes were imposed by acts of 1705, 1726 and 1742, and these were continued with little alteration down to the Revolution. They had become an important source of revenue, the export tax on tobacco alone yielding £7,000 in 1770. Though tobacco exports declined after 1770, over 40,000 hogsheads were shipped in 1775, and the trade of Virginia was constantly increasing. The total imports of Virginia and Maryland in 1769 were £851,140, of which £774,943 was from Great Britain. With the beginning of the Revolution
